“ I deeply regret that I lost touch with Andrew when I moved from Kansas City 20 years ago. He was a kind and gentle man of great intelligence and wisdom. I first met Andrew when I was his customer. I knew him then as a valued consultant and service provider to my employer, Forrest T. Jones & Co. When I later joined IBM, he was a treasured friend and mentor. Now that I find I could have reconnected with him after I moved back to Kansas City a year and a half ago, and failed to do so, it reminds me of how important it is to be sure be sure people know that you love them while you have the opportunity. Andrew, I love you and regret not having reconnected when I could have.

“ I am saddened to learn of Andrew's Homegoing. I did not have the pleasure of working with Andrew at IBM but remember his always pleasant smiling face. We would talk about our daughters being roommates at KU and how we looked forward to their graduation. The family have my deepest sympathy.

“ My husband, Winfield & myself met Andrew in K.C. in 1994 doing what he loved, playing pinochle and talking 'stuff' among friends at the Epicurean Club. We used to challenge each other's brain remembering words to old songs and just having fun. He welcomed us readily into his heart and home and we will be forever grateful for his friendship. Goodnight, our Friend 'Drewsky'!

“ I'll always remember Andrew for several things. He had a fabulous laugh! He loved music, dancing. Cooking seemingly was a passion even before we used the word passion for describing things people really liked. Andrew was always welcoming people to his home, which was always neat and clean. Just a side note: Andrew really had beautiful penmanship! Regina Harris

“ Andrew was someone I always admired. I admired him mostly for his intelligence, his determination, and lightheartedness. When I was a young high-schooler in the sixties, Andrew was one of my first real-life heroes, whose academic success fueled my college aspirations. I recall that he started college in the mid-1960s, just a few years after the Civil Rights Act of 1964 was passed; the result of the Civil Rights Movement. What an exciting time in history; and Andrew... equipped with an exceptional mind, and the Christian values instilled in him by his parents... stepped into his future, determined to earn a college degree and succeed. I also recall Andrew having a jolly disposition. Growing up, I remember he was always smiling and making everyone laugh. As the years passed by, the times we saw each other became rare. But, every encounter... every memory of him... up to the last time I saw him... is a memory of Andrew smiling. As I read the brief biography of his life, it is no surprise that, out of all his achievements and successes, the most important thing to Andrew was being surrounded by his family, friends and others whom he endeared. It touches my heart to learn that he was a voice for other African American professionals, at a time when we needed those few, lone, accomplished, and respected Brothers and Sisters to advocate on our behalf. No doubt... over the years, Andrew impacted many, many lives. It is clear he was a man who understood the purpose of life... and that is to live a life of purpose. To my beloved cousin Andrew's children and grandchildren; to Lloyd, Norman, Jr., Winnifred and the entire LaMothe family... God blessed and graced your/our lives with Andrew. May The Lord's comfort and grace pour down on each of you... and give you peace, at this moment in time... and always. With love, hope, and sweet, sweet memories of Andrew. Your cousin, Gwen & Family

“ It was my pleasure to work with Andrew (he was my manager) at IBM in the time frame of 1988 to around 1994. He was one of the best managers I worked for at IBM. He always gave me enough space to direct my own work yet never hesitated to rearrange my priorities when he needed them rearranged. I think his greatest attribute as a manager was that he put the interests of the people he managed on an equal plane with the interests of others external to our department. He was compassionate and fair and always looked out for his people. I miss working for him.
