“ Cellus was my best friend. We did everything together. We went to the same high school(Hogan Prep), went to the same college(Missouri Western), we were roommates at the college we attended for a little bit, we worked together(Wendy's), we played video games together, and even played football together, etc. Cellus is the definition of a real friend. He was there for me when I got sick and always checked on me and invited me to different events through the years. I cherish the moments we got to share together like the first time telling Cellus I had a baby girl on the way to the first time he got to meet her. He was so excited about the news. Or the times we played football together and compared ourselves to nfl players. I miss him so much and his playful nature. He will always be my friend and brother from another mother. I love you bro. Until we meet again ❤️

“ I had the pleasure of working with Marcellus at the City of Kansas City, Missouri. Two things that will always remind me of Marcellus are apple hats (I think that's what they are called) and his love for cookies.

He first came to work at the City as an intern. He and I spoke about an internship opportunity the summer before his last year of college. All I had to do was give him a little information about our IT environment and the summer internship project, Marcellus did the research and as an intern completed a project in one summer that was used months after his summer with us was completed. Not too long after the internship ended, we had opportunity to bring Marcellus on board as a full time employee. I'll never forget his interview because he wore his apple hat the whole time. I think it was his super power.

As a member of the development team, Marcellus did amazing work and had a peace and calm about him that was essential to the ever changing environment we worked in. If I had a project that needed a quick turnaround, I knew all I had to do was assign that project to Marcellus with a package of Oreo cookies. I still don't think I know anyone who loved cookies more than he did.

Marcellus was a great young man to work with and he will be missed.

Ms. Felicia, all of who he is and how he showed up in this world is a testament to the love, patience and guidance you pour into your children and others. I love you and may the peace of God sustain you always.
